Guiding Young Children's Behavior
Segment 1: Fostering Trusting Relationships

Host: Hello and welcome to this segment, fostering trusting relationships. My name is Maria Boykin, and I will be your host. Let’s begin by taking a look at our objectives for this segment.

Host: First we’ll describe why trusting, supportive relationships are important in children’s development. Next we’ll discuss why supportive relationships are especially important for children of Navy families. We’ll identify ways to show warmth using physical and non-physical interactions. We’ll describe ways to respond to children in authentic ways. And finally, we’ll discuss the benefits of assigning a special attachment caregiver to each child. Let’s get started
