

Center For Instructional Technology (CIT)

Mission Statement

The Center for Instructional Technology (CIT), a support group within Information Technology Services (ITS) at Eastern Connecticut State University, supports the application and integration of technology across the curriculum and provides essential support services for the use of technology in teaching, learning and research. To accomplish these strategic goals, the team works independently and in collaboration with other support teams within ITS, other university departments, external organizations and companies.

In support of the University's strategic objectives, CIT:

- Conducts continuous review of trends, products, and performance of targeted, current and emerging technologies having potential to support teaching, learning and research objectives. (5.1.4)
- Provides user documentation, training videos and CDs, individual and group training opportunities for faculty and students in the use of technology in the teaching/learning process. Campus-wide training is also presented. (5.3)
- Identifies and implements distributed learning technologies; supports faculty efforts to offer distributed learning courses. (5.4)
- Assists faculty developing digitized course materials. (5.4.2)
- Supports academic and administrative departments, faculty and students with the development of Web-based materials. (5.4.2)
- Offers consulting services to faculty and academic departments for determining best technology solutions and purchasing recommendations. (5.1)
- Develops and implements new support strategies for faculty and students. (5.2, 5.3, 7.4)
- Assists in the regular replacement and upgrade cycle for desktop equipment and software applications for faculty. (5.1.1)
- Upgrades instructional computer classrooms and the General Purpose Computer Lab. Assists in support of departmental computer labs when requested. (5.1.1)
